Grand Challenge: Putting Behavior in Context

James M. Rehg – Georgia Tech College of Computing

• How can we measure key environmental variables such as exposure to cues and triggers for adverse health-related behaviors?
• How can we infer a comprehensive characterization of the context for behavioral decision-making from noisy sensor data?
• How can we model the effect of environmental and social factors on behavior regulation in order to support behavior change?